ABSTRACT

The handbook provides Tucson (Arizona) parents of students with disabilities information to aid the transition from the high school environment to the community environment. The guide provides information on the vocational, academic, financial, transportation, counseling and recreation/leisure services available in the Tucson area. After an introduction, the guide describes the two primary agencies--the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation and the Division of Developmental Disabilities. Sources of academic opportunities both at the college/university levels and through adult basic education are given next followed by job placement resources and schools providing vocational skill training. Sources of information on residential programs, financial aid, and transportation resources are listed. Organizations sponsoring free or inexpensive recreation and leisure activities are identified as are counseling and therapy services, support groups, and community day programs. (DB)

INTRODUCTION

Soon your child will leave high school. Transition from the school environment to the community is a very normal process for all students and represents a major step from adolescence to adulthood. It is a critical time for making decisions about career options, living arrangements, social patterns and life-long goals.

For students with handicaps and their parents, the transition process is complicated by uncertainty about how and where to get a job, where to go for more schooling, where to live, and how to pay for the costs of school or training.

A carefully planned transition process can help reduce the uncertainty and stress associated with leaving school. The following is a brief reference guide to help you become familiar with the vocational, academic, financial, transportation, counseling and recreation/leisure services available in the Tucson area. This guide does not necessarily represent a complete or detailed listing of all the services available in Tucson, but, rather, those agencies you will often need to effectively develop a transition plan. You are encouraged to contact the agencies and become familiar with their eligibility requirements, availability and costs of services.

What Is Transition?

Transition is a time of change. A change from an adolescent school setting to an adult community setting. This handbook approaches transition as a process and as a product. The process is the exchange of information between parents, students, schools, employers, and vocational and academic training programs. The product is the student's integration into the community. In essence, the final goal of transition is not a referral to an agency; the agency is only part of the process. Rather, the goal is for each student to obtain satisfactory vocational, academic, residential, recreation/leisure, and community integration options.

When Does Transition Take Place?

The transition process should be initiated during the students freshman year of high school. Each student has different needs and his/her transition program will vary. Some students may need help with vocational development, academic preparation, independent living training or financial assistance while others may only need vocational guidance.

Who Is Responsible for the Transition Process?

Anyone can begin the transition process. Most problems arise when no one initiates it. Since students are in school and teachers are aware of graduation dates, the transition typically is initiated by a teacher, or someone designated by the school district. In most cases a transition team will be organized. This team may include parents, students, teachers, job developers, counselors, and adult service agencies. The team will meet as needed to develop, implement and monitor the transition progress of your son/daughter. As a parent you are a very important member of the transition team. Attend and participate in all of your son/daughter's school meetings. Ask questions, and do not be afraid to ask why something is being recommended!

TRANSITION PROCESS

Obtaining appropriate transition services in a timely manner can be a challenge. There are literally hundreds of federal, state, county, city, and private agencies offering services that could assist with your child's transition. At times, this process can become very confusing and frustrating. To minimize the confusion and frustration, this handbook will present a limited number of the more commonly used agencies.

Two primary agencies parents and students should become familiar with are the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation and the Division of Developmental Disabilities. These two state agencies are part of the Department of Economic Security and were established to provide assistance to persons with handicaps. The key difference between the two agencies is the length of time services can be provided. Vocational Rehabilitation considers their services offered to be "short term". Vocational goals need to be accomplished in a specified period of time. Developmental Disabilities can provide similar assistance for extended periods of time. If a student's transition plan includes a vocational goal the student should begin by applying for services through Vocational Rehabilitation. Depending on your son or daughter's handicapping condition and transition needs, they will also be considered for services from the Division of Developmental Disabilities. The following is a brief summary of each agency and how they may assist you and your son or daughter.

Division of Vocational Rehabilitation

Three Vocational Rehabilitation Counselors have been assigned to work specifically with high school students. The Vocational Rehabilitation Counselor can begin working with students as early as their junior year in high school.

MANY STUDENTS NEED HELP WITH THE COSTS...

Financial assistance may be available to some students and their families. Many different types of financial sources are available and should be considered. Some sources include grants, student loans, and general assistance. Eligibility is dependent on your family's income, son/daughter's high school grades, and type of handicapping condition. Some of the more commonly used sources are listed below.

Finanacial Aid

Supplemental Security Income (SSI)

SSI is a federal income maintenance program administered by the Social Security Administration. It is not the same as Social Security Retirement. The program provides monthly payments to individuals who are aged, blind, and or disabled. Children could also be eligible for SSA benefits that are available when a parent is retired or disabled and is also receiving Social Security. For additional information please contact the Social Security Office nearest you.

Southside: 2716 S. Sixth Ave.
Phone: 1-800-352-5488 (Toll Free)

Trade/Technical Schools, Colleges & Universities

Most approved schools offer financial aid to students. The amount of aid varies depending the on the program but may include grants, work-study, and student loans. Pell Grants and Guaranteed Student Loans help pay for tuition, books and school supplies. Grants do not have to be paid back, but loans must be repaid. Please check with each school for financial assistance available and the necessary application forms. Please keep in mind that most financial aid programs have deadlines and will not accept applications after the deadline.

Arizona Health Care Cost Containment System (AHCCCS)

Arizona Health Care Cost Containment System offers low costs health care for qualified persons. Further information can be obtained by calling 746-1073.

DES Family Assistance Administration

Families who need nursing assistance, home health care, or housekeeping can obtain assistance from Family Assistance Administration. Additional information is available by calling 628-5428 Extension 24.

Veteran's Benefits

If a parent is a veteran their son or daughter may be eligible for financial assistance. Further information can be obtained by contacting the Veteran's Administration at 1-800-352-0541.
